

Think.

Consider.

Are you frightened to pursue child support because:

- You are afraid of your ex-partner;
- Your ex-partner threatens to pursue increased visitation rights or custody;
- Your ex-partner threatens to take your children away from you;
- Your ex-partner may make things worse for you or your children; or
- Your ex-partner is using your children to gather information about you in order to harass you;

then...

Know there is help available to you.

Call your local Crisis Center or the NH Division of Child Support Services.

Child Support

Services

In the best of times, the financial responsibility for the care and support of a child can be difficult. When parents separate, additional financial burdens may be placed upon the custodial parent.

The New Hampshire Department of Health and Human Services Division of Child Support Services can assist you with the following services:

- The establishment of paternity;
- Locating non-custodial parents;
- The establishment and modification of support orders;
- The enforcement of support orders; and
- Referrals to additional support services.
